ATLONA TECHNOLOGIES UPDATES DESIGN OF DVI TO MINI DISPLAYPORT CONVERTER, THE DP200.

Atlona Technologies announces new design of the DP200 featuring USB power, and built in DVI pigtail. Atlona Technologies rides the wave of one of the most popular products ever to be introduced into the Mac accessory world, soon releasing the newest version of their commodious and innovative DVI to Mini DisplayPort Converter, the AT-DP200. This model is as beneficial, if not more so, to all Mac users out there due to the new features. Complete with USB Power and a built in DVI Pigtail, the all new AT-DP200 is will soon be available at an even lower price.

The tenacious DP200 instantly made an impression on the AV world being the first ever conversion box that could allow conversion of DVI to Mini DisplayPort while maintaining the displays optimal resolution. Along with passing all EDID and HDCP information, this device converts while allowing your computer to scale to the optimal resolution offered by your display. With this unit's new design and compact frame, it will easily find its home in the company of other Mac products.

No doubt, Mac users looking to use their older devises on newer Mac monitors such as the Apple Cinema 24" Display, the iMac 21.5", the iMac 27" or any other newer and upcoming Mini DisplayPort monitors will continue to appreciate this unique solution. Atlona's new DVI to Mini DisplayPort converter with USB Power and a built in DVI Pigtail, the AT-DP200, will officially be available November 30th with an affordable MSRP of $149.00.
